Nominating a school's induction tutor – user journey

29th April 2021

Department for Education

Screens that an induction tutor would see if their school is planning to use a funded training provider or deliver the accredited training materials themselves.

ZZ Test School 2,

From September 2021 statutory induction is changing. Schools must offer their new early career teachers (ECTs) a 2 year induction programme.

The Department for Education (DfE) has provided:

- statutory guidance so that schools know their roles and responsibilities
- guidance on the 3 approaches that are compliant with the new regulations:
 1. an approved training provider leads the programme
 2. the school delivers the programme using DfE accredited materials
 3. schools design and deliver their own programme based on the early career framework (ECF)

Schools need to read our guidance and choose an approach that works for them:

What schools can do next

We have launched an online service to help schools manage their new programme.

When your school has decided on an approach, nominate someone who manages statutory inductions at your school:

This link expires on 21/05/2021.

Manage training for early career teachers

This service is for induction leads/tutors nominated by their school.

Use this service to manage your school's statutory induction programme for early career teachers.

Only use this service if your school wants to:

- use an approved training provider

Or

- use the DfE accredited materials

Your school must complete these steps before your early career teachers (ECTs) start their statutory induction programme. For example, if your ECTs are starting in September, you need to complete these steps before then.

Have you signed up with a training provider?

The easiest way to sign up to this programme is to contact your local Teaching School Hub.

They will talk you through how to access this support for your early career teachers and mentors. Not sure? Find your local Teaching School Hub.

Training providers are also recruiting schools across the country so you may hear from them.

Getting confirmation

- when you have confirmed an agreement directly with your training provider, they will update the DfE (this may take a few weeks)
- this page will be automatically updated
